

Appendix E: Analytical glossary of inflected words in interlinear examples

The following glossary only explicitly represents inflectional prefixes, derivational prefixes, infixes and some suffixes. (For various reasons, some derivational prefixes were typically not segmented in the text. This glossary therefore gives slightly more complete morphological information than in the text.) The underlying forms given are quite certain for prefixes but only approximate for suffixes when the latter are shown at all. Noun stems and verb stems are otherwise not analyzed as there may be many changes and complications, and indeed underlying forms are not always obvious; see §13.2.3 and chapter 19. Some verbs are simply marked as with subscript _{Irreg} to indicate that the verb is especially irregular. Forms marked with superscript ^{PV} (postvocalic) are those which occur following a vowel; otherwise they would have an epenthetic i at the beginning. The underlying forms include V (vowel of unspecified quality), C (consonant of unspecified quality), âa (long vowel that conjugates as a short vowel), subscript _{Abl} indicates ablaut of a following vowel of certain qualities. The citation forms beginning with cõ| are found as subentries under words of the shape that follow the vertical bar. A given analysis may not be the only one possible for a given word, but those given are found in some example in the chapters of this text.

⁴ Nouns such as this one (beginning with i or ii) could be analyzed as possessed nouns (which for obvious reasons only occur with third person possessor) or simple nouns. The 2005 dictionary listed iizax as a simple noun. However, the use of iizax with various expressions in the names of months (see chapter 15) seem to indicate that the word may in fact be a possessed noun, as shown here.
